

Highlights on the new construction service law

April 21, 2017

The Government of Indonesia has issued a new regulation regarding the construction services in Law No.2 of 2017 concerning Construction Service. In general, the new regulation is aimed to accommodate the concerns from practitioners for improvement. It is expected to meet the demands of good governance and the dynamics of the implementation of construction services.

Partners in Dentons HPRP Andre Rahadian and Hendra Ong supported by associate lawyer Dinda Triwijanarko have prepared a comprehensive article on the new construction service law. The article highlights several important points in the new regulation, among others: the objectives of the law, what is new in it, the business type and forms of construction services, registration and certification, foreign construction service business entity, building failure, sub-service provider provision, dispute settlement, sanctions, and grandfathering provisions.
